

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Don J. Kraemer teaches undergraduate and graduate courses in Composition and Composition theory, English education, children's literature, sociolinguistics, creative writing and magazine editing at California State Polytechnic University, Pomona, where he also serves as faculty advisor for the literary journal, Pomona Valley Review.

Martha D. Patton teaches a range of courses in writing, women's literature, and the humanities at the University of Missouri--Columbia. She has published several book chapters about writing in the disciplines as well as articles in journals such as The Writing Instructor, The Journal of Technical Writing and Communication, and The Journal of the Council of Writing Program Administrators. Her current book project explores an evolutionary view of genre, disciplinarity, and rational activity through the keyhole of one particular discipline, civil engineering.

Kenan Metzger is an assistant professor of English at Ball State University in Muncie, Indiana. He has ten years of teaching experience at the secondary level where he helped to create innovative composition classes for at risk students. More recently, he has five years of experience at the college level teaching composition classes and methods courses focusing on the teaching of writing.

Johanna Schmertz is an assistant professor of English at the University of Houston-Downtown, where she teaches writing, film, and rhetoric. Her work has been published in Reader, Rhetoric Review, and Postscript: A Journal of Film and the Humanities.

Leila Christenbury taught high school English for several years before becoming a professor of English Education at Virginia Commonwealth University. She teaches young adult literature, the teaching of writing, teaching methods for both secondary and middle school, and instructional theory and design. Some of her publications include Making the Journey: Being and Becoming a Teacher of English Language Arts, Writing on Demand, and Both Art and Craft: Teaching Ideas that Spark Learning. She is a well-known writer and researcher in English education, past English Journal editor, and past president of the National Council of Teachers of English.
