

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

Katherine Keil is currently teaching English at Ruston High School. She taught at both Louisiana Tech University and Lishui University in Lishui, Zhejiang Province, P.R. China (ESL). Since earning her undergraduate degree in English education, she has acquired a Master's degree in English, National Board Certification, and membership in the National Writing Project. She has published articles in Explicator and English Journal.

Jody Lawrence is an assistant professor of elementary education at the University of Northern Colorado, where she teaches language arts and reading courses, supervises student teachers, and coordinates the elementary teacher education program.

Glenda Moss is an associate professor of secondary education at Indiana University Purdue University–Fort Wayne, Associate Director of the Scholar Practitioner Center, and Co-Editor of scholarlypartnershipedu. As co-site-director of the Appleseed Writing Project, an affiliate of the National Writing Project, she provides leadership in the area of teacher research and teacher professional development. Other research interests include narrative inquiry into critical pedagogy, multicultural education, and portfolio assessment. Her most recent book, Crossing Boundaries and Building Learning Communities: Critical Education and Narrative Research in Praxis, is forthcoming with Hampton Press.

John A. Staunton is an assistant professor of English Education at Eastern Michigan University. He is the author of Deranging English/Education: Teacher Inquiry, Literary Studies, and Hybrid Visions of "English" for 21st-century Schools (NCTE 2008), and his research on literature and the teaching of literature has appeared in Journal of Adolescent and Adult Literacy, Studies in American Fiction, Religion and Literature, and Short Story Criticism.